

The road to the White House

Nothing was predictable in Donald Trump's third run for the Oval Office. He spent days in courthouses rather than on the trail. He accepted his party's nomination at the GOP convention just days after an assassination attempt. His opponent dropped out of the contest before Labor Day and was replaced by the sitting vice president. In the end, Trump, who lost to Joe Biden in 2020, won a decisive victory in November, with 312 electoral college votes to 226 for his Democratic opponent, Kamala Harris.

JABIN BOTSFORD/THE WASHINGTON POST

JABIN BOTSFORD/THE WASHINGTON POST

TOM BRENNER FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP RIGHT: President-elect Donald Trump with his wife, Melania, after being declared the winner on election night on Nov. 6, 2024. Trump speaks to reporters after handing out food at a drive-through window in October. Trump with his wife during the Republican National Convention in July. Members of the Secret Service surround Trump after an assassination attempt in Pennsylvania. Trump speaks during a campaign event in Arizona in August. Supporters at a campaign rally last January. Trump, flanked by attorneys Todd Blanche and Emil Bove, during his criminal trial in New York in May.

JABIN BOTSFORD/THE WASHINGTON POST

JABIN BOTSFORD/THE WASHINGTON POST

JABIN BOTSFORD/THE WASHINGTON POST

JOEL ANGEL JUAREZ FOR THE WASHINGTON POST